In the case of the school nurses, as we shall point out later on, the effects of lack of supervision are serious, and similar results must in some measure be felt all through the department. It is impossible for the Health Officer to keep his hand on twenty-five employees doing such different classes of specialized work as are involved in a modern health department and at the same time to devote the requisite energy to the development of broad lines of policy. In order to improve the details of office administration in the interest of efficiency and economy and at the same time to free the Health Officer for the development of broad policies along the newer lines of public health, we believe that something in the nature of bureau organization should be introduced. The...
