The fact is that he uses it on a far larger scale than does the writer of the Fourth Gospel, only he does not take over the word; another title used by Philo of the Logos was already in Christian use and served his purposes better--the Son of God. The striking designations of Christ and the functions attributed to him in Heb. 1:2,3 may be found in the Book of Wisdom and in Philo, there having reference to Wisdom personified and the Logos. Of Wisdom it is said in a notable passage (Wis. 7:26): For she is an effulgence (4irai)7a0ia) of eternal light, And an immaculate mirror of God's energy, And an image of his goodness. Philo says that every man in regard to his intellect is related to the divine reason, being an airavyaa.fux of that blessed nature;1 and that...
