I also refer to Smith on Master and Servant, p. 159, . and to Mitchell vs. Crosweller (13 Com. B. It. , 237), where Chief Justice Jaevis said, I think, at all events, if the master is liable where the servant has deviated, it must be where the deviation occurs in a journey, or where the servant has originally started on his masters business; in other words, he must be in the employment of his master at the time of committing the grievance. Then Mr. Justice Maule said, The master is liable even though the servant, in the performance of his duty, is guilty of a deviation or failure to perform it in the strictest and most convenient manner. But where the servant, instead of doing that which he is employed to do, does something which he is not employed to do at all, the...
