In our post-Christendom age, Christianity is losing its status as a lingua franca as the postmodern society has become highly suspicious of its presence, especially as an institution. With the final stages of the modern period the presence and power of traditional Christian ideologies is coming to an end. In this book, the author is re-inventing what is called the Pastoral Cycle to infuse new ways of dealing with change by using real life experiences. The author works with four realities which is of importance to society (Beauty, Prosperity, Purpose and Community) and relates these four realities to a process that prepares faith based institutions for necessary change.
