Thus by turning a crank slowly with considerable effort for a short time, we store up a certain amount of work which may be made to run a light machine at high speed against a light resistance, through a comparatively long time. Unfortunately only a small part of the work is utilized, and the labor of winding up the machine is far from being compensated by the useful effect obtained. The amount of work that can be accumulated in a steel spring without passing the limit of elasticity is, of course, limited. It will vary naturally with the quality and size of the spring. Experience shows that when employing the best steel known, converted to the form of a clock spring (which is the most favorable for such a service), the amount of work stored will not exceed 40 kilogrammeters for each kilogram of metal. In practice the loss from friction and deformation of the spring is about 80 per cent. It is true that the majority of the steam engines afford no better return of the total work stored in the fuel, but these latter consume coal only, while the spring motors run at an expense of muscular force, which is the most expensive and the most precious of all sources of mechanical work. M. Fontaine declared that the springs could be profitably replaced by a weight which would restore a large proportion of the labor...
