No doubt you have suspected that the black Dora, who came to our summer-house, was my Princess Mina; and so she was! She has gone back, poor thing! to the town where her old mistress lived, in hopes to find a slave she was very fond of, and set him free. She went once to rescue a friend of her mother s, was seized and sold, and lived for a year with the good Mrs. Wilkins. But Mina was not happy. She wanted to learn, and to be free; so she ran away the second time, and came to us. Mina has something of her mother s gift. She sees sights, hears sounds, and things are told her she dbesn t know how; only they seem truer than anything else. When she wanted to go South for her mother...
