The Spiritual Help Which a Church Gives to Its Minister: Two Sermons Preached in the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, N. Y., November 18, 1866, on the Completion of Twenty Years of Pastoral Service So when one suggests a new theory in science, and publishes that in volumes to the world: a great impression may be made by it for the time on the minds of thoughtful and studious men. But it is singular to see how, with the rarest possible exceptions, within a few years the theory that looked plausible and satisfactory at the outset, has ceased to hold in allegiance to itself the minds of its students, and they have passed on, better instructed by other theories, to the larger view of the ampler system of which it showed but a partial conception. Or another devotes himself to the establishment of some special policy in the State, which seems to him to be right in itself, and for the advantage and interest of the State, in whose welfare and progress he is concerned. And after a little, when another generation has come upon the stage, and other questions have grown prominent and paramount, the policy to which he devoted so much of labor, of time, and of political skill, is found to have been wholly removed from the sphere of men's action and thought. It has simply passed away from their view, silently as the morning cloud; and the questions around which the minds of citizens surged and wrought so vehemently aforesaid, have ceased to be questions appealing to them; the policy which the statesman sought...
