It is hidden now in little corners. Bring them into the light and learn to love this part of our human nature. I need to do this too since I have a bipolar illness combined with paranoia. This is a little story about how I ended up writing this in a hospital bed to learn to love this illness. I rarely talk about it. I feel it is important to communicate my experience so that others may learn. It is filled with advice so you do not have to repeat the mistakes I have learned. Some of the advice includes: Take stress leave when you need it Never make any important decisions when you are Manic. Listen to your family and trusted friends. Make sure they have a list of the signs and symptoms of the illness. Tell them if you think you need help. Listen to your heart. When you are on lithium, you can only lose a pound a week. Exercise, especially thrilling exercise helps with depression. Learn to let go.
