Partridge India, United States, 2014. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Rajveer had many memories of Anisha to cherish but Anisha had very few. They didn't have many conversations but still know everything about each other. How strange? When your parents support and destiny oppose that is what the story is all about. A Punjabi boy and a Gujarati girl, two different cultures and religion but still both are alike - very same to each other. All of us have different plans to make the first commitment to our dear ones but when our commitment is never completed than. Something such happened to Rajveer and Anisha. It is an incomplete story with a complete end. Anisha thought her father had made strict rules for her, so he will never support her but the reality of life was that he only stands by her side breaking all his rules he took the best decisions for his daughter's happiness. Such are our parents, they are very rude to us in our particular age but they can do anything and everything for our betterment. Parents are always the same whether mine or yours. Their only intention in life is their child's future and better life for him. There is a dialogue in one of my favorite films that In India, parents are everything for children and children are their whole world for parents and it's still true. My story conveys the same message.
