Excerpt: .English Bible lies man as Grotius has unwarily contributed to the dotages of infidelity, this is such a misadventure as one cannot regard but with the utmost pity and concern. open to every free-thinker of Great Britain, where they may read it that will, and understand it that can. As for such writers, as the author of the Grounds and Reasons, to say the truth, one would never wish to see them otherwise employed; but when so great and good a This excellent person, for it is not to be disguised, has made it his constant endeavour, throughout his whole comment on the Prophets, to find a double sense even in those direct prophecies which relate to Jesus; and to turn the primary sense upon the affairs of the Jewish dispensation, allowing them to relate to Jesus only in a secondary; and by that affected strain of criticism, has done almost as much harm to Revelation as his other writings have done it service: not for any strength there is in his interpretations; for this and his Comment on the Apocalypse, are the opprobrium of his great learning, but only for the name they carry with them. I am the freer in my censure, because I can prove what I say. The principle which Grotius went upon, in commenting on the Bible, was, that it should be interpreted on the same rules of criticism that men use in the study of all other ancient...
