Can a serious author venture into humorous writing without destroying the last few shreds of his credibility? Let's find out. Dog stories, cat stories, redneck stories, horse stories, Hong Kong stories, and of course the infamous hog stories. I'd like to meet Michael LaRocca; he seems like a great person. I admire those who turn adversity into something positive. I'm still amazed that someone who held a boar's penis in his hands on a daily basis ended up teaching conversational English in China. Brett Scott, Timeless Tales Many times throughout the book I found myself laughing hysterically over his perspective on life, whether or not it was in America or Hong Kong. It's a personable book and I enjoyed it immensely. How Red Is My Neck gives us a view of China that we might not find in American media. We could learn a lot from each other and our contrasts. If you're looking for a book that touches your heart and keeps it light as well, this is the one for you. I really loved this book and give it a top rating of 10. Dallas Franklin, Sell Writing Online One man's Redneck is another man's Country Gentleman. Stephen Shore laughed my ass off at the absurdity of it all. Your story gave me details I didn't wait for on television. Strong lead, good pace, good imagery. You had me hooked. Bettina Tison Bennett, author This book will have the reader laughing out loud as they read the hilarious tales of Mr. LaRocca's life. He shares stories about his dogs, his cats, his horses, and some of his more adventurous jobs. There is not a dull moment when reading...
