Excerpt from Pastoral: Poems Then, if in other climes, or Britain's vale What matters Where, when nature's (worn so Then let me-oh attend nor leave me so 0 let me weep! Return, and tell my woe. Why, Phœbus, yet thy daily visit pa - y Whose solar beams raise no responsive lay Or; I've no more the sense of mortal cheers, Where white rocks feed, or red rose-bud appears. Affected hues of Cypress I imbibe, And deep communion to redeem my bride Nor I no more hold dance in vocal airs, Where Thyrsrs and Menalcas take their pairs. Propitious Muse I now loose all thy dawn, And Orpheus, who cheer'd the balmy lawn Or more with Pallas break the roe'd green A sacrifice is all i now would seem Therefore, approach, to raise the wretched prize, Ye who are fam'd so gloriously to rise In awful tones, the trembling shades here heap But, first my frame in holyincense steep Extracted from ambrosia's gummy gems, And drain their incense, and consume their stems. Come, now, take your farewell...
