THE HUMAN BODY: AN ACCOUNT OF ITS STRUCTURE AND ACTIVITIES AND THE CONDITIONS OF ITS HEALTHY WORKING (CLASSIC REPRINT)

Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 566 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 1.1in. Excerpt from The Human Body: An Account of Its Structure and Activities and the Conditions of Its Healthy Working In making this revision I attempted to preserve, so far as possible, the spirit and method of the Author. Numerous changes were necessary, however, as well as the addition of much new material, because of the great advances in Physiological knowledge during recent years. One important departure was made from the former plan of the book in emphasizing the adaptive character of human activities; a departure which required an entirely different treatment of the Nervous System, as well as minor alterations throughout the book. It involved likewise a rearrangement of the chapters so as to bring together those dealing with Muscles, Nerves, and Sense-organs. The conception of the Body as an Adaptive Mechanism is so helpful to an understanding of its activities, particularly on the part of general students, that I felt justified in introducing it even at the cost of very considerable departures from the original plan. To make room for the new material without enlarging the volume unduly some of the purely anatomical portions were condensed; I hope without impairing their value seriously. Likewise about forty illustrations were omitted, where they could be spared. For the few new figures introduced, electrotypes were furnished by the publishers of Howells and Kirkes text-books of Physiology, and of Baileys and Scymonowicz and MacCallums text-books of Histology.
