Excerpt from The Old Bamboo-Hewer s Story (Taketori No Okina No Monogatari): The Earliest of the Japanese Romances, Written in the Tenth Century Fonusau there lived an old man, a bamboo-bower, who bowed bamboos on the bosky hill side, and manywise he wrought them to serve men s needs, and his name was Sanugi no Miyakko. Now one day, while plying the hatchet in a grove of bamboos, was he suddenly ware of a tall stem, whence streamed forth through the gloom a dazzling light. Much marvelling, he drew nigh to the reed, and saw that the glory proceeded from the heart thereof, and he l looked again and behold a tiny creature, a palm s breadth in stature and of rare loveliness, which stood midmost the splendour. Then he said to himself, Day after day, from/i dawn to dusk, toil l among these bamboo-reeds, and this child that abides amidst them l may surely claim as mine own. So he put forth his hand, and took the tiny being. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic...
