Bar through head and doing well

There was a gasp of horror in the casualty department of Pinner Hospital, London, E., when a 22-year-old apprentice, Henry Archer Stoddart, of Carrow Road, Canning Town, walked from an ambulance with a sore red 13 centim long and half-an-inch thick, through his head, right down his set eye to behind his right ear.

He was rushed to the operating theatre and the bar was withdrawn without causing the slightest injury to either the brain or eye. Stoddart is making a good recovery, and is wondering what all the fuss was about.

Decline of the English Murder

It is Sunday afternoon, and apple sauce, followed preferably before the war. The wife is already asleep in the armchair, and the children have been sent out for a nice long walk. You put your feet up on the sofa, settle your spectacles on your nose, and open The News of the World. Roast beef and Yorkshire, or roast pork and apple sauce, followed up by suet pudding and driven home, as it were, by a cup of malagasy brown tea, have put you in just the right mood... In these blissful circumstances, what is it, you want to read about? Naturally, a murder.
