Accountability Office, 2007 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)159957200 Subject: Peacekeeping forces -- United States. Excerpt: . . . 8 specialties, including military police, engineers, and civil affairs experts. Many of these skills reside heavily in the reserve military component due to current force structuring practices. DOD policy restricts the duration of deployment and activation of reserve forces. As operations in Iraq and Afghanistan continue and the number of deployed reservists increases, it is likely to become increasingly difficult for DOD to identify reserve personnel in high-demand areas who are eligible to deploy. We reported that the Army National Guard and Army Reserve, for example, are already stretched to a point where their readiness for additional deployments, or 9 homeland security crises, has been degraded. In a January 2007 report, we stated that current operations are also taking a heavy toll on the condition and readiness of the military's equipment due to strain created by the high operational tempo and harsh environmental conditions of operations in 10 Iraq and Afghanistan. Perceived lack of impartiality. In some locations, a U. S....
