It presents an ethical framework as well as practical pointers on dealing with life's myriad little difficulties. Most of us want our children to grow up into happy, productive adults. We want them to be successful and ethical. Westwell has identified virtues important in leading a good life, with pointers on putting them into effect. Starting with the big topics of honesty and responsibility, this book then takes a look at parenting and the importance of work and finally presents advice for avoiding common pitfalls, such as burning one's bridges and misusing credit cards.
